College students are graduating in a challenging credit environment. Many non-profit organizations are trying to provide credit education for young people in what many say is a national epidemic of financial illiteracy. In this one hour program, South Carolina bankruptcy professionals provide information on managing student loan debt-our country's next credit bubble. As part of the C.A.R.E. (Credit Abuse Resistance Education) program of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court local bankruptcy judges and lawyers give their time to share with students the unique knowledge they have gained about credit and personal finance in and around the bankruptcy court. Stories of real people who have come through the bankruptcy system are shared by the lawyers who helped them clean up the mess. A wealth of resource material about handling your debt after you graduate and Q & A after the main presentation will provide students what they need to navigate the perils of student loan debt post graduation. From the perspective of experience, South Carolina lawyers give their time freely to help students avoid what they see in bankruptcy court every day.

Special Guest: The Honorable Helen E. "Beth" Burris, Judge of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the District of South Carolina
